balloon can fly. Without too much cheating, they succeeded on two out of three attempts. The square one didn't make it.

The stunt was inspired when someone at Arthur D. Little, Inc., one of the United State's most dignified think tanks, discovered that the firm has a history of debunking cliches. It seems that in 1921 the founder pounded a sow's ears into filament to make a silk purse.

The experts said the problem in flying a lead balloon is getting the heavy metal thin enough to make the balloon without being so fragile it will tear. So they used lead foil draped tightly over a wooden superstructure.
