For some time we have been trying to impress upon you the need to avoid taking unnecessary finesse. Now, to confuse you, we will show how a finesse that is against the odds can nevertheless be the correct line.

North-South bid smoothly to their club slam. When a cue-bidding sequence revealed that North had no honor control other than the ace of spades, South was content to play six clubs.

West led his fourth-best heart. Declarer discarded a diamond from dummy and won in his hand. Since declarer could get rid of his low diamond on the queen of spades, the slam would come home if declarer could pick up the queen of trumps or, if he lost a trump trick, if the diamond finesse worked.

Holding nine trumps, the percentage play is to try to drop the queen. However, declarer realized that possession of the ten of spades considerably increased his chances for the contract.

At trick two declarer cashed the king of clubs. Then he cashed a high heart, stuffing another diamond from dummy, and ruffed his remaining high heart! This provided a key entry to the table, for declarer could not afford to cross to the ace of spades if his play were to succeed.

Now declarer led a trump from dummy, and when East followed low, he finessed the jack. When West showed out, the slam was home, regardless of which defender held the king of diamonds.

Declarer's unusual line guaranteed his contract as long as East had two or three clubs. Assume that West held the queen doubleton of clubs and the trump finesse failed. The trumps would now be exhausted, and West would be on lead with an insoluble problem. If he led a heart, declarer would ruff in dummy and discard a diamond, then discard his remaining diamond loser on the high spade. If West led a spade into declarer's K-10, declarer would now get two discards on dummy's spades because he could enter dummy with the eight of trumps. And a diamond would be into declarer's A-Q tenace.

Rubber bridge clubs throughout the country use the four-deal bridge format. Do they know something you don't? Charles Goren's "Four-Deal Bridge" will teach you the strategies and tactics of this fast-paced action game that provides the cure for unending rubbers.
