Swimmers in again after shark attack

PORT ARANSAS, Tex. (AP) — Thousands of people frolicked on the surf after officials decided to keep beaches open today even though a teenager lost an arm in a shark attack.

April Dawn Voglino, 16, of Kingsland was attacked by a 1.5-metre shark and was in serious but stable condition Sunday after undergoing surgery at Memorial Medical Centre in Corpus Christi, hospital officials said.

The shark swam away after the girl's father pounded on it.

One of April's arms was severed about 15 centimetres above the elbow in Saturday's attack.

Nueces County Commissioner J. P. Luby, whose jurisdiction covers 35 kilometres of beaches, said the attack was an isolated case and decided against closing beaches.

The Easter holiday weekend drew more at least 100,000 people to the area, Luby said.

The teenager was in chest-deep water near Mustang Island when the shark attacked her.

Robert Voglino, who was swimming with his daughter, pounded on the shark as the girl attempted to swim to shore. Voglino was uninjured and carried his daughter ashore after the shark swam away, authorities said.

Andre Landry, a fish behavior expert from Texas AM University at Galveston, said there have been between only about 15 documented shark attacks along the Texas coast within the last 100 years.

He said it is the time of year sharks swim in shallow waters to raise their young.

Smelter emissions kill Manitoba lakes

WINNIPEG (CP) — Emissions of cadmium, zinc and copper from the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Co. plant in Flin Flon are killing aquatic life in northern lakes, says a federal scientist.

Jack Klaverkamp, a division manager with the Freshwater Institute of the Department of Fisheries, said the plant, about 650 kilometres northwest of Winnipeg, has been emitting high levels of dangerous metals for more than 50 years.

Unless the smelter curbs its emissions, fish and other aquatic life will die, he said. Even if the emissions ended today it could take 10 years to see signs of change.

Wayne Fraser, Hudson Bay's director of safety and the environment, said about 90 per cent of the metals emitted by the stacks are recovered through a filtering process and a device that uses an electric charge to attract metal particles to wires.

Klaverkamp and a group of researchers collected 300 fish and mud samples from 13 lakes near Flin Flon and Thompson, about 700 kilometres north of Winnipeg.

The study found levels of cadmium in the mud were sometimes 50 times higher than levels considered safe for aquatic life. Levels of zinc and copper, non-poisonous metals, were sometimes 100 times higher than normal.

Cadmium levels in the livers and kidneys of fish were 13 times higher than in fish from other Manitoba lakes.

"We've dived in lakes around Flin Flon and in some there is no sign of life at all," Klaverkamp said. "The lakes are just dead."

"In a Canadian context, this problem is not as serious as acid rain. But it is a very serious matter locally."

"The lakes are not going to go acidic and be dangerous to people, but there simply won't be any fish in most lakes."

Cadmium, a metal
