Pass Pass Opening lead: Ten of ♡

The Principle of Restricted Choice states that if a player has a choice of cards to play, he will sometimes play one, sometimes the other. Therefore, if he plays one card, he is unlikely to hold the other. In simple terms, mathematically a player is more apt to hold one specific card than two specific cards. Declarer put that principle to work to make his game. Note South's choice of four spades at his second turn. Since he had originally responded one spade. he was now showing a game-going hand with a self-sufficient spade suit, and his partner was free to bid on if his hand warranted.

West attacked with the top of his heart sequence. Declarer won with dummy's ace and led a trump to the ten, and West's nine caused declarer to reflect. If it was a falsecard from 9-8, declarer could simply continue with a trump to hold his losers to two trumps and the ace of diamonds. But if the nine was a singleton, declarer was in danger of losing three trump tricks. Applying the Rule of Restricted Choice, declarer elected to believe the nine to be a singleton.

He cashed four rounds of clubs, discarding two diamonds from hand, then continued with the table's last club. East was faced with a Hobson's Choice. He either could refuse to ruff, in which case declarer would sluff his last diamond to hold his losers to three trump tricks, or else East could ruff and allow declarer to overruff, permitting declarer to limit his losses to two trump tricks and a diamond. Either way. South was home.
