Political report blasts agencies

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. agencies acted in a "grossly negligent" and "unacceptable" manner by failing to investigate terrorism as a possible cause of a 1985 plane crash in Gander, Nfld., that killed 248 American soldiers, a congressional report said today.

The aftermath of the Arrow Air DC-8 crash was marked by "a near-total absence" of U.S. participation in the Canadian investigation of the tragedy, said the study by the staff of the House of Representatives Judiciary subcommittee on crime.

"We found no evidence that there was an investigation of possible terrorism," added the United States or Canada, either the report, which formed the basis for a subcommittee hearing today.

"Incredibly, no U.S. government agency, or at least none with official responsibility, demonstrated any determination to find out just what caused the crash," subcommittee chairman William Hughes (D-N.J.) said at the hearing.

"The National Transportation Safety Board, and other agencies of the U.S. government, chose to sit back and watch as the Canadian efforts became embroiled in controversy," Hughes said.

The NTSB's rubber-stamped the Canadian findings, without comment," Hughes added.

The Canadian Aviation Safety Board found by a 5-4 vote that icing of the wings was the most probable cause, but a subsequent Canadian review found that ice had not been the cause. The U.S. National Transportation Safety Board nonetheless supported the original finding blaming it on ice.

Opening lead: ?
Once in a while you can take advantage of the bidding to do something extraordinary that, if circumstances are right, could produce a sensational result. For example, study this diagram and see if you can discover how declarer came to only nine tricks at his four-spade contract when it would seem that, with the ace of hearts onside and trumps breaking, 11 tricks were there for the taking.

South tried to make the stronger hand declarer by first using Stayman to see if North by any chance held four spades. When North denied a four-card major, South made a game-forcing jump in spades and North, with three-card support, raised.

West reasoned that, since North was the no-trump opener, the king of hearts was more likely to be in dummy than with declarer, so that defender made the deceptive opening lead of the queen of hearts! With the ten in hand, declarer made the normal play of ducking in dummy, then playing low again when West continued with four. East was surprised that his jack won the trick, but not enough to fail to play a third round of the suit. West's ace completed the defensive book, and the 13th heart was now led. Declarer discarded a club from the table, East ruffed with the ten and declarer overruffed with the king.

Declarer was one of those thoughtful types. South came to the conclusion that the only reason West had defended so peculiarly was in the hope of promoting a trump honor. So declarer cashed the ace of trumps and then finessed the board's eight. Thus East scored a trick with each major-suit jack, and declarer's 11 tricks had shrunk to nine.

We'll let you in on a secret. Given such inspired defense, we'd probably have played the hand the same way!
