'Puffing' passenger stranded

TORONTO (CP) — A 28-year-old woman has been denied return passage from Portugal to Toronto after she lit up on a non-smoking Canada 3000 flight.

Delia Do Rego, stranded in the European country after being refused passage back to Canada, is claiming short-term memory loss played a part in getting her burned.

"I was asleep, got up to go to the washroom on the plane and instinctively grabbed a cigarette . . . my mind went blank to it being a non-smoking flight," said Do Rego from the Iberian Peninsula.

She said because of a serious fall eight months ago, she suffers memory loss.

On Jan. 24 she and her brother flew to Portugal to visit their parents, who have retired there.

Do Rego smoked in the plane's washroom, despite repeated warnings to butt out.

She says she only remembers lighting up twice — while airline officials say she broke the rules four times.

So when she went to confirm her return ticket this week, the carrier said she wasn't welcome aboard.

"I just brought spending money — I don't have the cash to find another airline to get me home," she complained.

Canada 3000 Airlines spokeswoman Christine Strong said if someone poses a risk to the health or comfort of fellow passengers the company can refuse to fly them.

The rules also mean they don't have to give a refund.

"She was warned again and again, and when a crew member asked for her flight coupon (Do Rego) tore it in half," said Strong.

The original Canada 3000 return ticket cost her $550 and she says booking passage on another airline may cost her $1,000 more.

"I'm a Canadian citizen, they can't do this to me," said Do Rego, saying a police officer escorted her off the plane when they landed in Portugal.

"This has been too much of a screw up . . . I can't believe all this fuss over a few puffs," she fumed.
