Cleanliness can be a killer

Dear Ann Landers: Your column is a great way to educate millions of people, and I hope you think my letter is worth printing.

I have Multiple Chemical Sensitivity. This means I have become so sensitive to so many chemicals that I am like that canary in the coal mine. If I sit next to a person for a minute, I will react to his or her laundry detergent, perfume, antiperspirant, hairspray, and so on. I am also affected by car-exhaust fumes, and must wear a mask to go for a drive or walk outside.

In order to create a livable environment for myself, I had to remove every chemical in my home.

How did this happen? I worked for 10 years in a chemical plant, and had constant daily exposure to perfumes and other chemicals. The company I worked for is extremely safety conscious, and follows all the rules. Even so, the chemical odor was quite noticeable, and my reaction was severe, including joint stiffness, swelling and pain. More recently, I have been getting stroke-like reactions, such as numbness on one side of my body, slurred speech, dizziness and nausea.

The first few doctors I saw insisted I had psychological problems. I am thankful that I now have a competent, well-educated environmental doctor who is helping me. There is a treatment to desensitize the sufferer to those enzymes that cause the problem, but it is obscure and expensive, many doctors do not know about it, and insurance agencies do not always cover the cost. Only specially trained doctors are familiar with this treatment.

My plea is to manufacturers who put toxic chemicals, such as perfumes, in their products when they are not necessary. The only products I use to clean my house are Borax, baking soda and vinegar. Those do the job just as well as those high-priced, brand-name chemical cleaners. Please, Ann, tell them to stop adding all that stuff before more of us become incapacitated. — Bonita in Brockville, Ontario

ADVICE ON LIFE

by Ann Landers

Dear Bonita: Your letter will be greatly appreciated by readers who have the same problem. Meanwhile, the sale of Borax, baking soda and vinegar is sure to increase because you wrote. We have been using all of the above in my home for a long time. I learned about their effectiveness from my mother.

Many readers complained about magazines that inserted highly perfumed ads for fragrances, and I see that the practice has decreased. Speak up, Readers. The consumer really is king.

Dear Ann Landers: I have been divorced for three years, and have a 5-year-old son. I have had a wonderful boyfriend for the last two years, and hope someday to marry again. My ex-husband despises my boyfriend, and wants him to have nothing to do with the rest of the family.

My ex is a Mama's Boy, and always has been. He is currently living with his mother, and when my son visits, she takes over completely. She even took a job at my son's school so she could be closer to him. My ex takes no responsibility for the boy, and expects his mother to raise him.

Here's the problem, Ann. I want to have a birthday party for my son, but his grandmother insists on doing it her way, and doesn't want my boyfriend to attend. I would have two separate parties, but I can't expect his little friends to go to both. How can I get Grandma to back off without causing World War III? She is very set in her ways, and I have learned not to cross her. — Pennsylvania Problem

Dear Penn.: Since you are certain that Grandma is not going to back off, plan your own party, then, phone the mothers of the guests and tell them absolutely no gifts. That should do it.
