ODDITIES

Bras exposed in food fight

WELLINGTON (AP) — A group of women protesting genetically modified food took off their shirts in New Zealand's parliament revealing matching pink bras.

"We've lobbied, we've lobbied our supermarkets, we've lobbied our food producers, we've taken it to the High Court," Hillary Ord said after the protest in the parliament's public gallery. "This is the result of absolute frustration."

Ord said the group was angered by government plans to lift a ban on genetically engineered crops being planted in New Zealand fields.

The women, from Mothers Against Genetic Engineering, shocked legislators by stripping as a legislator asked a question about the country's economy.
