Then one morning, as she was doing her stand-up with the harbor in the background, the movie's submarine glided across the water. Jones turned, spotted it and spent a minute or so shouting, "Harr-ison!" at the startled film crew.

"Who knew?" she says, tossing out a favorite expression. "Who knew I'd be lookin' for Harrison Ford and that sub would just come sailin' by?"

The Ford incident is the kind of behavior that either delights or infuriates viewers. Some people tune in to "CBC Morning" just to see what Jones is up to; others write outraged letters about her irreverence and folksy announcing style - the personal comments, dropped Gs and spontaneous outbursts of mischief.

Her interviews sometimes veer unexpectedly into foreign terrain, where information runs a distant second to offbeat observations, and guests become straight men.

Usually it works. The guests realize Jones is incapable of taking herself seriously, and they get into the spirit. The result is a just-plain-folks interlude amid the gloom and dread of the daily news.

As "CBC Morning" co-host Mark Kelley says, "There's no in-between with Colleen. Viewers either love her or they absolutely cannot stand her."

Kelley has known Jones since the show was produced in Halifax, and they worked together on the set. The Truck Lady, he admits, takes a while to get used to.

"Before I started on the show, I was a little leery: 'What is this woman all about?' But she's infectious," he says. "She's a breath of fresh air."

Jones admits there are viewers "who want it to be like the BBC, where it's all serious and no fooling around."

"I can see where I wouldn't exactly be up their alley. There are people, like my father, who say you shouldn't play around with the news: 'There's no sense horsin' around.'"

When Jones started with "CBC Morning," she was cast in the role of standard sports and weather person - and her zany streak often seemed to be at odds with the traditional, set-bound structure of the show. It sometimes seemed as if she had a demon inside, urging her to shake the place up.

One trademark is a tendency to get sidetracked between spots, which at least once a day left her scurrying to get back on the set before the camera panned to an empty spot.

"I always meant to get back in time. I'd go to get a coffee, and I'd end up talkin' to somebody, and all of a sudden: 'Whoops!' They'd get so mad at me, and I'd get giddy," she says. "They'd always hear this pounding of feet. I had a couple of people talk to me about that."
