

HE LOST HIS HEART TO A GALWAY GIRL

by : Carson Law

It was as the final credits began to roll that I knew what I had to do. I had to experience this true and passionate love that was just presented on the screen. From the atmosphere of the quaint, smoky and cheerful bar to the intense blue eyes of the tall, dark and handsome man that had sang with such heroism and charisma. I knew an Irish man was the man I wanted to meet. P.S. I Love You, a film that entails the combination of a tragic love story with a humorous and uplifting adventure is one that I believe exemplifies a love that everyone should experience. The plot is exceptionally delivered through various scenes, but one in particular shows how it all began in the land of green rolling hills, four leafed clovers and joyous people that can make any situation a memorable one. The scene in P.S. I Love You where Gerard Butler is singing "Galway Girl" to Hilary Swank is the scene where their love story began. This scene exemplifies what a true night out in Ireland involves. It presents the aspects of each character's personality, and it is filled with the true essence of what romance in Ireland can be. It is the scene that made me fall in love with the idea of Gerard Butler's character Gerry Kennedy.

For the most part, the Irish are the friendliest, happiest and most charming people you would be lucky enough to meet. The scene in P.S. I Love You represents exactly how a night out in Ireland really is. On every street there are small pubs filled with the best live music pouring from the open windows and doors. Similarly to the movie, most of the performers are dark-haired attractive men with piercing eyes and mysterious grins that would appeal to most women. The music is loud and pouring through the entire pub with people standing and stomping or swaying with the beat as they are sipping away on a pint of Guinness. It is in those