

IT'S THE CHIEF - EDITORIAL

Hello everyone,

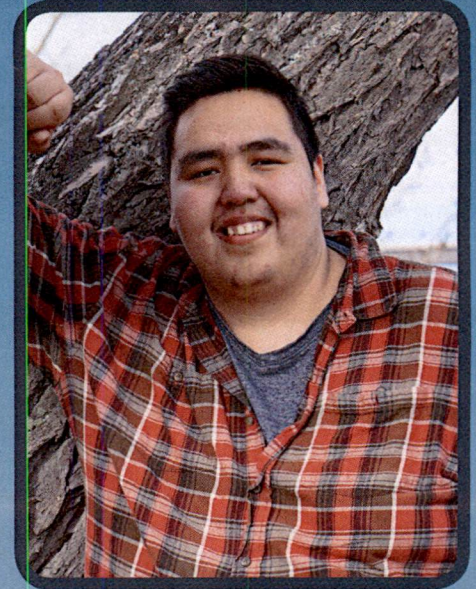

There is some bittersweet news in the office today. On the bright side, I have been promoted to the role of the Communications Officer! On the more sombre side, I have to give up my position as the editor-in-chief. This is not something I am doing lightly, but I am very excited at the prospects of the role I am going into.

I am not leaving the Confluence altogether, however. As the Communications Officer, I am overseeing the development of the magazine for the foreseeable future.

On an exciting note, we are now doing our search for the new Editor-in-Chief of The Confluence! If you have any questions about the position or wish to apply, you can swing by the students union. Any applicants must provide a resume, and a portfolio if they have one. Applicants must be proficient with computers and be willing to learn the programs that we use to develop the magazine.

Until we find a new Editor-in-Chief, I will remain as the Interim Editor-in-Chief and Raegan will oversee submissions.

I am fully confident that we will find a suitable replacement, and I am fully expecting them to take the magazine to places that they have never been to before!

Cheers!

Interim Editor-in-Chief

ABOUT THE COVER

Agyapal Singh is a first year Business Management student who has been featured on the cover a total of three times.

Talented at both graphic design and photography, Agyapal is absolutely someone to look out for on the scene.

I am very happy to have had Agyapal submit his cover for the magazine, and look forward to seeing more from him!
