Hello friends and happy belated Diwali!

Diwali has come and gone, as it was on October 27th, so I am very late to the celebration. However, the Student's Union hosted and organized the celebration this year and we all attended the Diwali festival at the Civic Centre on the 8th of November. For those who don't know, Diwali is essentially an Indian festival of lights. Fireworks are the main event of the night, as well as many performers and of course, the food. It was absolutely a grand event.

In other news, CNC celebrated their 50th Anniversary on Wednesday, November 6th. If you're like me and the time capsule sitting just outside of the cafeteria has driven you nuts for the last few years, November 6th would have been the day for you. The objects found inside the time capsule reflect CNC 25 years ago, in 1994, and they will be on display in the library until the end of February, for those not able to attend the celebration.

Apart from the excitement from celebrations, I have certainly been feeling the mid-semester funk, and I know my classmates are as well. I have officially reached the point in the semester where skipping class is becoming all the more tempting. I must fight the urge. We can fight it together. It is also really starting to get chilly out and I am trapped in between the decision of wearing my ski jacket for warmth, or my jean jacket for fall fashion. Difficult times, difficult times.

As always, have a good couple weeks you lovely people!

Thanks for reading.
